Historical Finds

 THE OLDEST BUILDING in Wilton is believed to be the David Lambert House built in 1726 and located in Lambert Corners, 150 Danbury Rd. The house has had many lives, first as a combination home and tavern, later as a station for the Underground Railroad, and in 1897, the scene of an infamous and brutal murder that captured the public imagination. The property eventually passed into the hands of Royal Kellogg and his sister, Ruth and is now owned by the Wilton Historical Society and rented out for residential and retail purposes. Given the centuries of history surrounding this structure, it's no wonder the outline of the home appears on Wilton's town seal.

The Wilton Congregational Church (70 Ridgefield Rd.) is the oldest meetinghouse still in use in Fairfield County. Erected as a place of worship in 1790, the building still functions as a church as well as a community touchstone. With its tall spire and white siding, the ecclesiastical structure is one of Wilton's most distinctive landmarks.
